(Photo: Candice Smith/Reuters) Donald Trump has been turning out record-breaking crowds at his campaign events, but if his supporters are looking for a direct line to the people who might hold the key to his chances of winning the election, they're out of luck. There's a lot of talk of whether Trump can convert his successful rally-style campaign into a president. There's little talk that he will find the kind of audience he does at these "victory rallies," where he boasts about how massive the crowds are at his appearances, and how he's running against the whole political establishment — and the media. "We're fighting the whole media and they're against us," Trump said at his speech in Cleveland, Ohio, on Monday night. The media, Trump alleged, was directly responsible for the threat to national security represented by Hillary Clinton. "We're only as strong and as great as our enemies think we are," he said. "This election is about whether we're going to make America great again. We're gonna make it better than ever before." A crowd of almost 18,000 roared in approval as Trump repeated those remarks. So, what are you going to do with it? Do you think we're really going to make America great again? It's a question that's been asked since the beginning of Trump's campaign, particularly as it relates to his attitude toward minorities and minorities' concerns about feeling as though they're second-class citizens in a country where they've lived for years. There was no general answer, either for Trump supporters or for those who have given 3e33713323
